Meet Our Physicians

Primary Care Physicians are listed by city.

Primary Care Physicians

Primary care physicians include family practitioners, internists (internal medicine), and pediatricians.

Pediatricians, family practitioners, and internists complete a three-year residency training program after graduating from medical school. While all primary care physicians receive the same amount of post-graduate training, the focus of their training is different.

Family Medicine training encompasses a broad range of medical ailments which are typically treated in an office setting. These include general adult medicine, pediatrics, gynecology, and in-office surgical procedures such as stitching wounds and setting broken bones.

Internists receive training in diagnosing and treating diseases of the major internal organ systems. This means they have more training in the areas of cardiac and pulmonary disease and do not have a focus on surgical procedures. Internists usually don't see children under the age of 15. Check Greater Newport Physicians website at gnpweb.com for more information on age restrictions.

Pediatricians focus their training on the treatment and prevention of illnesses found in children from infancy through the teen years.

Each person enrolled with Greater Newport Physicians MemorialCare has the option of selecting the primary care physician of his or her choice. For example, each member of a family could choose a different primary care physician: the mother might choose a family practitioner; the father, an internist; and the parents could select a pediatrician for the child.
